Welcome to this podcast about the Sheepmarket, which is one of the oldest parts of the city. As it suggests, there was originally a market here where farmers brought their sheep, but now it's been turned into a buzzing, vibrant area of the city, which is also home to one of the city's fastest-growing companies. The nearby university has always meant the area's popular with students, who come in to enjoy the lively atmosphere, but now graduates embarking on careers in the worlds of fashion and design are buying up the new apartments recently built here to replace the small houses where the market workers used to live.

The narrow old side streets are great places for finding original pictures, jewellery and ceramics which can break the bank, as well as local produce like fruit and vegetables. There's also lots of pavement cafes where you can have a coffee and watch tourists from all over the world go by. The oldest buildings in the area are on the main streets, including the city's first department store, built in the 1880s, which is still open today.

The Sheepmarket is a centre for fashion, and there's a policy of encouraging new young designers. The Fashion competition is open to local young people who are passionate about fashion. This year the winners were asked to design an outfit based on ideas from the music and technology that's part of their everyday lives, using both natural and man-made fibres. The garments will be judged by a panel of experts and fashion designers, and the winning entries will be modelled at a special gala evening.

Parking at the Sheepmarket is easy. There are plenty of pay and display car parking spaces on the main streets which are fine if you just want to stay for an hour or two, but if you want to spend the day there it's better to park in one of the four underground car parks. It's not expensive and if you can present a receipt from the local stores, you'll not be charged at all. After six pm many of the car parks have a flat rate which is usually very reasonable.

The Sheepmarket is one of the main centres for art and history in the whole of the country.

If you look at our map, you'll see some of the main attractions there. Most visitors start from Crawley Road at the bottom of the map. The Reynolds House is one of the oldest houses in the city, and is open to the public. It's on the north side of Crawley Road, next to the footpath that leads to the public gardens.

The area's particularly interested for its unusual sculptures. 'The Thumb' is just what its name suggests, about 10 metres high. You'll see it on Hill Road, across the road from the Bank.

The Museum's got a particularly fine collection of New Zealand landscapes. It's on the east side of Crawley Road, Sheepmarket. It's on the other side of the road from the public gardens, immediately after the junction with Hill Road.

The Contemporary Art Gallery is on a little road that leads off Station Square, not far from the public gardens. The road ends at the gallery - it doesn't go anywhere else. That's open every day except Monday.

The Warner Gallery specialises in 19th-century art. It's on City Road, near the junction with Crawley Road, on the same side of the road as the public gardens. It's open on weekdays from 9 to 5, and entry is free.

Finally, if you're interested in purchasing high quality artwork, the place to go is Nucleus. You need to go up Crawley Road up through Station Square and east along Hill Road until you get to a small winding road. Go up there and it's on your right - if you get to City Road you've gone too far.
